Esplanada Dom Carlos I, 1990-005 Lisboa

Dates

September 20 - 21, 2018

Organizers

The University of Porto, the University of Lisbon and the UiT the Arctic University of Norway, through their Faculties of Law and the K.G. Jebsen Centre for the Law of the Sea (JCLOS)

Organizing Committee:

Marta Chantal Ribeiro, Fernando Loureiro Bastos, Tore Henriksen

COLLOQUIUM

The Colloquium is divided in three sessions, as follows:

Session I: The role of the International Organizations in the implementation and development of the Law of the Sea

Rationale: Papers in this Session shall address and discuss legal advancements and practice developed by international organizations, which contribute for a significant evolution of the Law of the Sea. The goal is to assess the contribution of international organizations for new understandings, solutions and procedures that induce a visible progress of the regime established by UNCLOS, in 1982. Amongst other they include, International Maritime Organization, United Nations bodies (e.g., General Assembly; Security Council), Convention on Biological Diversity, Food and Agriculture Organization, World Trade Organization Regional Fisheries Management Organizations and regional conventions or agreements (e.g., Antarctica system; OSPAR system, Barcelona System, Arctic system, European Union, etc.).

Session II: Superpowers, international courts and the Law of the Sea: challenges for the global oceans regime

Rationale: Papers in this session shall address and discuss the interplay between international case law and international politics. It should be assessed, in the short and long term, the superpowers compliance with the international courts decisions and how this affects, positively or negatively, the interpretation, implementation and effectiveness of the Law of the Sea (e.g., Arctic Sunrise case; South China Sea case; East Timor v. Australia on-going case).

Session III: The protection and conservation of the areas beyond national jurisdiction: where do we stand

Rationale: Papers in this session shall address and discuss the current developments regarding a future International Legally Binding Instrument under the UNCLOS on the Conservation and Sustainable Use of Marine Biological Diversity of Areas Beyond National Jurisdiction (e.g., marine protected areas; EIA; genetic resources; proposals for governance; role of the regional level; dispute resolution) or the current developments in the exploitation of the Area and the future challenges of the international seabed mining (e.g., environment; sponsoring States and contractors duties; surveillance and enforcement).
